THE MAN IN THE CAR.

The man. He sits down On the car seat, And The woman She stands up On her two feet. And the man, Absorbed in a great thought. Is so entirely wrought Up by it that he never sees The woman; and the woman, also, Absorbed in a great thought. Is so entirely wrought Up by it that she never sees anything

But the man
Holding down that car seat.
And her feet
Are almighty tired,
But not half so tired as she is
Of the kind of manners
That man has got.
And there are others.
And man

The man Hangs on to the car seat Because he has as many feet As the woman has, and they are twice as big. And take twice as long Te set the tired out of them. And he doesn't care it she does call him a pig. And the car Jumps and Benups and Bumps and Starts and stops, And the woman nearly drops, But the man never does. And the man his paper, woman as she is shoved around ill be pulled out by the roots, on the man

coun't seem to care
long as he isn't dragged out of his seat nd the conductor says "Tickets," nd "Step forward, please," and "Hold fast everbody," and "Transfers," and "Steenth street," Ticth street," and "Comth street," nd "Tyninth street," things not fit for publication ing in the sent Grits her teeth

And Sticks her nails into the strap
And she feels a seam in her waist
Give way, and she bangs into the crowd
And she knows her hat isn't on straight
And all the blood has run Down out of her fingers, and her arm Feels like a lump of putty Stuck full of needles and pins
And the man
Folds up his paper
And shows some signs
That something is going to happen
Refore this time next year And

And
The woman takes hope
And partly relaxes her grasp
And the conductor sings out:
"Hold fast, everybody,"
And the woman grabs hold again
And presently the man Sticks his paper in his pocket
And pulls his evercent tegether And smooths himself out and Rises up before the woman
And takes off his hat
And hows and makes a bluff at being polite while he is about it And the woman is smiling With an infinite sense of relief at last And trying to say, "Oh, thank you very much."

When she would ever so much rather choke him Another woman behind him Slips into the sent he has just vacated The man flets off the car wondering if he will ever See her again, and feeling pretty Well pleased with himself

And
The woman
Grabs the strap again
Grabs the strap again
And entirely forgets the man
Who had the seat before Thinking of the woman
Who has it now and with as much right
To it, as she thought she had to it
When the man had it.
She being a woman.
